edged daggers secreted in two of the cells on the first floor.

The discovery was made by Wilkinson while making his regular inspection of the cells after the chain gang had left for their day's work on the rock pile. Upon entering one of the cells the jailer's eye caught the glint of bright steel beneath one of the cots. Feeling to see what lit was his hand drew out a dagger. A rigid investigation revealed the second dagger. Voshaming Torahiko, a Japanese taken investigation revealed the second dagger in an adjoining cell.

The prisoners at the time of their arrest and booking are thoroughly searched, and it is practically impossible for any of them to carry a concealed weapon into the cell. Visitors at the jail are only permitted to con-verse with the prisoners in the presence of the jailer or attendant and it would be difficult for any weapon to be passed through the bars without detection by the officers. It is possible that the knives were handed to some memoer of the chain gang while out on the road, or they might have been passed through concealed in some package of food stuffs or clothing given to a prisoner by an outside con-federate.
